

My love is lunique and ldifferent for each person I love.

My love is lqueer

Queer in its original form used as an insult meaning "non-straight"

*****

Any attempt to compare

compare

would be absurd

*****

Not a label, not an identity, only a negation. It's not about who you are but about what you are not: monogamous, straight, cis... not in the dominant norms, not in the right boxes

A negation of the current norms that opens wide the horizon of the field of possibilities

The love I share with each person is distinct to our bond, different from others, and self-sufficient

My love [challenges]
learned norms

My love is [anarchist]

emancipating
itself
from social hierarchies
that dictate
the prioritization
of
romantic
and sexual relationships
over
other
forms
love

rejecting the idea that romantic love is superior to other forms of love / or that it must be directed only to individuals of the opposite gender (assuming only two genders exist) / It doesn't adhere to the belief that romantic love
should be exclusive
to one person / or that sexuality is the necessary glue in any love
relationship, ...

and so on.
The list
of norms
my love
defies is extensive.

My love offers [complicity], a proposition of mutual support, nurturing a dynamic of empathy and assistance in a hostile world

it evolves with mutual consent wherever it suits
us,
regardless of societal or moral judgments

My love appreciates the word

[no]

The most beautiful sign of freedom is when a loved one feels free to say "no." Let's celebrate what this "no" signifies about the relationship: freedom at its core

My love is [plural]

it's not a limited resource to be rationed to one specific person. This perspective avoids unnecessary competition

My love is [nihilistic]

it-doesn't-require-gender distinctions

It focuses on the individual not on their gender identity

My love separates [sex] from [intimacy]

and recognizes intimacy in sharing vulnerability

Intimacy is not exclusively reserved for sexual partners and sex can happen without intimacy
